MINISTER FOR HOME AFFAIRS
MINISTER FOR IMMIGRATION AND BORDER PROTECTION

MEDIA RELEASE

VISA CANCELLATIONS FOR SERIOUS CRIMES

Fourteen violent criminals convicted of serious assaults and other violent offences were among 43 foreign nationals in South Australia stripped of their visas last year.

Two had visas cancelled for committing murder, seven for serious drug offences and a further seven convicted of child sex offences.

Nationally almost 1,200 non-citizens had their visas cancelled and faced deportation from Australia in 2017.

Minister for Home Affairs and Minister for Immigration and Border Protection Peter Dutton said the strengthened section 501 provisions introduced by the Coalition in 2014 are a powerful and effective tool to manage those who pose a threat to the Australian community.

“We have zero tolerance for non-citizens who put Australians in danger and think they can exploit our visa system,” Mr Dutton said.

“We take the safety and wellbeing of Australians very seriously. Anyone who thinks they can come to our country and commit crimes can think again”.

Mr Dutton said Australians are grateful for law-abiding visitors who contribute positively to the country; however there are always those who think they can use and abuse our laws and harm our citizens.

“We have strong measures in place under section 501 of the Migration Act to deal with these criminals; they are not welcome in our country”.

The most visa cancellations occurred in New South Wales where there were 430, followed by Queensland with 300. Victoria with 217; Western Australia with 179, the Northern Territory 16; Australian Capital Territory eight and Tasmania five.
